OUR STORY

Hill Country is a Texas barbecue institution with a New York address. Marc Glosserman opened it in 2007 because he grew up with Central Texas barbecue in Lockhart, where his grandfather was the mayor.

The counter works the same as Lockhart: step up, order by the pound, watch the pitmaster carve, and carry your tray to a table lined with butcher paper. Nearly 20 years of prime beef over post oak imported from Texas, and none of it has moved.

Catering is that same counter, packed to travel. Post oak smoked meats, scratch made fixin's, and enough Longhorn Mac & Cheese to make your guests bless your name, delivered anywhere from rooftops to boardrooms to your own backyard.

Whether it is a Tuesday office lunch for 15 or a blowout for 500, the pit travels and the planning stays on our side.
