Beaujolais

Tour de Crus

November often celebrates Beaujolais Nouveau, an easy drinking, early release from this small region located on the southern end of Burgundy. But look beyond nouveau into the wines of the 10 crus of Beaujolais and you will find an array of diverse and complex wines at an incredible value.

Other than the fact that all of these wines are made from the gamay grape, each Beaujolais cru has its own distinct personality – climate, soils, altitude, aspect, and a host of other factors – that are duplicated nowhere else.

The 10 Crus of Beaujolais

Beaujolais, like most French regions, ranks its vineyard sites. Vineyards from this region can produce simply 'Beaujolais' while ranked vineyards can label wines 'Beaujolais Village'. The top sites are considered to be located in the areas designated as crus, and can label their wines with the cru name only.

Here is short introduction to the 10 crus of Beaujolais.

Saint Amour: The northernmost cru, bordering Burgundy's Mâcon. Wines from this region are intensely red-fruited

Juliénas: Known to be a little sturdier than some of the other crus, with a signature red cherry profile

Chénas: Can be considered the rarest, but simply because there is not as much quantity coming out of this particular cru. What is special about the terroir of this region is the quartz soils

Moulin-à-Vent: Typically described as the sturdiest, most tannic, and longest lived

Fleurie: Fleur means flower in French, and these wines typically live up to the name with notes of violets found in your glass

Chiroubles: At the very highest altitudes of Beaujolais, which leads to later ripening and quite a bit of complexity.

Morgon: Granitic soils in this region lend a minerality to the wines of this region. Morgon is filled with excellent wine makers including all four of the "Gang of Four"

Régnié: Distinguished by its pink granite soils, these wines can have a lightly spicier profile

Brouilly & Côte de Brouilly: Côte means side or slope, and is exactly where this cru lies in the middle of the larger Brouilly cru. Due to its aspect to the sun, it ripens a little more than its surrounding Brouilly, which creates a lighter style
